

How do I protect exam security?

This brief tip sheet describes methods to assess students using quizzes in the online environment without using software that locks students in a browser (test/exam) window. Please remember, Lockdown Browser does not work off campus. (You need NorQuest computers or laptops to access.)

Students are new to online exams

It is important to allow students to experience an online exam in your course before a summative exam or quiz. Consider putting a short (fun) practice quiz and ask students to navigate through it prior to a summative assessment. Use the settings for your real exam/quiz. Remember to look at the Moodle Help resources to see how to build a Moodle quiz. Please reach out to Moodle@norquest.ca for further support.

Change your exam

You may make your exam an open book with open-ended questions. Consider still using strict timing. (See below.) To estimate the time you should allow, complete your exam and multiple the time you took by 3.

Develop strict timings for your exams

If your exam is online and consists of mostly multiple choice, give one minute for every multiple choice question, and add one minute for every ten questions. For example, if you are delivering a 50 multiple-choice exam, allow 55 minutes to complete the test. Of course, you will need to look at your exam. Are there too many questions that may allow students to search on the Internet quickly? Do you have questions that involve a lot of reading and/or videos that will require extra time? This is a guide.

Once you have established how long the test will take, make sure you give time for students who may experience difficulties logging in. For an hour exam, consider giving a 1.25 or 1.5 hour window. Do not give a long period. You want the time for students to write to overlap. See Moodle time setting next below.

Please note: We do not recommend a Submission grace period. If students are working on an essay and have not saved it, no work on this question is saved.

Make sure students are aware of the timing through emails, online lessons, and News Forums. Timings are posted on the Quiz page. See below.

Create a large test bank category and make test have X many random questions from a quiz category

This is the most work for you. Developing great quiz questions is difficult. Developing double or triple the number of the questions you may need is not an easy task. If you are using a test bank from a publisher, please review prior to using. Sometimes publisher test banks do not reflect your teaching outcomes.

Review Options

Please check your Quiz Review Options for summative quizzes and tests. You do not want students to see the questions after they have completed their exam. Even if you select Immediately after the attempt, all quiz questions come on one page and students are able to save these questions with ease. See the recommended Review Options below.
